

Journalism

The Bachelor of Arts in Journalism is a pre-professional program that provides students with a solid foundation in traditional journalistic practices and theories as well as new forms of journalism that are emerging as a consequence of digital technologies and networks that are rapidly reinventing the field. The course of study includes the theory and methods of gathering information and writing for beat reporting, investigative and features stories. The program introduces students to the professional responsibilities faced by journalists and news organizations with in-depth studies of the ethical and legal ramifications of news gathering and dissemination.
